HeartWork: A Video Celebrating the Lives of Direct-Care Workers

PHI's theatre of witness performance, HeartWork, is now available on videotape. The video chronicles the the development and presentation of this original theatre piece performed by women who work as home health aides and certified nurse aides. Through story-telling, music, song, and dance, the six cast members tell the story of their lives, providing a real, honest, moving, and often humorous account of what it means to be a paraprofessional caregiver.

The video, which includes in addition to the performance, interviews with cast members and scenes of them caring for their actual clients, is an excellent educational tool, which can be used in in-service trainings with direct-care workers and/or supervisors, at events celebrating direct-care workers, or to create greater public understanding of the value of caregivers to our society.

The Paraprofessional Healthcare Institute (PHI) produced the HeartWork educational video in collaboration with HomeCare Associates of Philadelphia, a worker-owned home care agency. Most members of the cast are employed at HomeCare Associates. PHI is an employment development and advocacy organization working to promote quality jobs and quality care in long-term care. Located in the South Bronx, PHI distributes information on the long-term care workforce through the National Clearinghouse on the Direct Care Workforce (www.PHInational.org/clearinghouse)
